

Osama, Obama and Hisbulla

The three factors in world politics and peace.

It is true that a powerful nation like the US cannot plead guilty to any wrong done earlier. That is humiliation. Let us not expect that type of behaviour from the big man. Let them set about bringing changes that could improve relations with the parties concerned, whether in the form of negotiations or in some other way. Misunderstandings and misgivings are not helpful in world affairs.

Then the never-ending issue of Palestine. It is true that the British played a bigger role creating the Middle East situation if not the problem itself. After the Balfour declaration they seem to have withdrawn from the scene giving its place to the new world leader the US. Have they played their part honestly to ameliorate the suffering of the displaced Palestinians? How many times have they stood in the way of applying UN resolutions to improve the conditions of Palestine people?

Why does not Israel stop building houses in disputed Palestine land? Why does the Israel government ignore all UN resolutions ?

Because they are sure of US support giving them arms and ammunition to fight the displaced Palestinians

Hisbulla is again no evil fallen from nowhere by accident. It is as a result of the aggression of Israel. It is no use telling the world that Arab nations made the situation worse by attacking the new nation. That failed war is now history, but the suffering of Palestinians is reality, which cannot be ignored for ever. Patching up operations in the form of negotiations without genuinely removing the main obstacles to any progress is useless. This game ought to stop in the name of world peace and sanity.

Obama should review the Bush doctrine of 'exporting' democracy to countries that are not ready for the American medicine.

The most recent addition to the pack, of course, is the Nobel-Prize-winning Obama. Other two were the creations of his predecessors and unwillingly adopted by him, by virtue of his powerful position.

Obama is too well known to be explained or analysed. How about Osama and Hisbulla ?

Familiar names but their antecedents are shrouded in history and mystery. Who came first, and who was responsible for their arrival on the international scene of action?

Osama was killed by Obama's agents who 'invaded' a sovereign country looking for US enemies. Those enjoying power and position can afford to flex their muscles as and when they think necessary. Their incursions are not invasions because they are done by the US.

Parents have no right to kill their own son or daughter, but in this case the son had grown too big for his shoes. That was too much..

How come Obama became Osama's father, or creator, one may ask. In fact it was his predecessor by the name of Bush that brought about the monster by the name of Obama in order to counter the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, Obama just had to adopt him. No, by the time he arrived on the scene, 'once-darling' had become persona non grata.

Obama arrived after 9,11 by which time erstwhile friends had become enemies. What most peace-lovers forget is that Bush went after a non-existing Al Qaeda into Iraq because he waded some excuse to topple Saddam Hussein.

Now, Al Qaeda is everywhere, in Iraq, in the US and in Afghanistan where the US itself brought this unholy character into being.

What Obama and his colleagues do not realize is that their problems were their own creations and cannot be solved without removing the causes that led to the current situation.

First, the war in Afghanistan. Why does not the US admit their initial mistake of boosting an uncontrollable force which is now appearing everywhere?

These may be false hopes, but someone has to ask the US to downplay its role and help the UN to do its job, at least as best as it could.
